There are many stories associated with the ancestors in the above list that are given in other documents. The story of John Gardner (1661-1738) is especially interesting.

It is a well authenticated fact that on or about 27 June 1699, Captain William Kidd, of pirate fame, visited Gardiner's Island. then in possession of its 3rd proprietor, John Gardiner (grandson of Lion); and that, in exchange for certain supplies furnished him, Captain Kidd gave to John and his wife presents of cloth of various sorts, and placed in John Gardiner's care, to be subsequently called for by Kidd, several bales and boxes containing gold, silver, jewels, and cloth of various sorts. After the arrest of Captain Kidd, John Gardiner reported to the government authorities the existence of this deposit, and subsequently turned it over to a government committee appointed to receive the same and took their formal receipt therefor.

Among the gifts presented to John Gardiner and his wife Mary King was undoubtedly the "Cloth of Gold" (or "Kidd Blanket") which on account of the incidents attached to its acquisition became an heirloom in the family; and this heirloom, by the varying influences of family history, has passed from the possession of those bearing the Gardiner name and is now in the possession of the heirs of the late Mrs. Joseph Hobson, of Washington, D.C..

It has also been said that the wife of John Gardiner Mary King was requested to roast a pig for Captain Kidd. She being afraid to refuse him, cooked it very nice, and he was much pleased with it, he then made her a present of this silk ("Cloth of Gold"), which she gave to her daughters.
